

TRAFFIC PROBLEM
BEFORE COUNCIL

There was a regular meeting of the City Council on Monday, July 11, all members answering the roll call, with Mayor H. H. Smith presiding.

The California State Automobile Association advised the Council that they working out a plan as to the erection of reflector signs, etc., whereby the traffic congestion at School streets could be avoided. As Mission street is a state highway, it is necessary that this matter be also taken up with the state.

The Market Street Railways communication was read, referring to complaints made by certain citizens on Wellington avenue. They said that there will no more blasting in this quarry for many months; however, if the occasion arises when more blasting will be done, a minimum amount of powder will be used. Half of the men employed in this quarry reside in Daly City.

The telephone company sent in a communication saying that they have developed a plan whereby telephone bills can be paid in Daly City, and would be pleased to discuss the details of this plan on August 1, or thereafter.

A communication was received from the Board of Fire Commissioners, advising that Fireman Savelly No. 5.

A communication was received from Mrs. S. Wind, 262 Crocker avenue, advising the Council of an old garage which stands close to her residence. The communication of Mr. R. Syphens, asking permission to sell Rawleigh products within the limits of Daly City was referred to the ordinance committee. Mr. Syphens resides at 18 Bon View street, San Francisco.

The Library Committee reported that 3,700 books were distributed last month and 69 new members enrolled.

Husband is Arrested for Taking Silver Service

Officer James Readon arrested Clifton Cooper, 31 years of age, residing at 6843 Mission street on a felony charge last Monday. The warrant was issued from the district attorney's office in Redwood City and was signed by Judge Farrell, of South San Francisco.

Cooper was charged with taking a $700 silver service from his wife, Mrs. Kathleen Cooper, who preferred charge of grand theft against him.

The couple recently separated, according to police. Cooper is alleged to have departed with the silver service, which his wife held as security for a loan which she had made. Cooper was turned over to the sheriff's office at Redwood City.

The hostess, who is Past Matron of the Chapter and Past Deputy of the Order of Eastern Star, was assisted in entertaining by Ada Van Valkenburg, also Past Matron.

Worthy Matron Anna Neff cordially invites all her members to her home on Sixteenth avenue, on Thursday, July 21, at 8 P. M., for a social bridge-whist party. All are looking forward to a most enjoyable evening and are inviting their friends. Sally Neff, the charming daughter, will assist her mother, in entertaining.

Baptist Will Preach in Presbyterian Church

The Northern Baptist Convention now being held in San Francisco will be represented in Grace Presbyterian church on Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service, when Rev. H. C. Mathews, pastor of the Roger Williams Baptist church of Los Angeles, will be the speaker. As a mark of hospitality the members and friends are urged to attend this service. In the evening at 7:45 Rev. John R. Stevenson will speak on "Reading the 33rd Psalm by the Light of the Stars." During the absence of the pastor the pulpit will be occupied by Rev. C. E. Lukens, of San Jose, and by the One by One Club in the evening.

LEGION PRAISES
SCOUT MOVEMENT

The meeting held last Friday night by Daly City Post No. 410 of the American Legion was most interesting.

Comrade January, who has been living in San Diego for the last few months, to be near his invalid father, was present and made a few remarks on Boy Scout activities down south, as he is a very enthusiastic Boy Scout supporter.

Daly City Post takes pride in endorsing Comrade R. L. Crane, District Superintendent of Schools, as candidate for first vice-commander of the Eighth District. Not only is Comrade Crane a live member of the local Post, but also very active in the San Mateo venture of the 40 and 8. He is already endorsed by most of the Posts in the Eighth District. Best wishes, and bring home the bacon!

Members of the Post have decided to discontinue their monthly dances for the summer months.

On Friday evening, July 2, a regular meeting will be held in the Woodrow Wilson school, when delegates to the State Convention will be elected. On Friday evening, July 29, the Post will give a whist party in the Daly City Welfare Board building, 12 Wellington street. Come and enjoy a nice evening.

Members of the Advisory Board of the local Boy Scouts were present at last meeting, and were introduced by Councilman Bodien. Comrade Johnson of the Veterans of Foreign Wars gave a lengthy and interesting talk on the Boy Scout movement. Scout Leader Chester Smith also was an interesting speaker. Comrade Johnson said that co-operation from the local civic and fraternal organization is what built up these fine troops in Daly City.

Daly City Post takes this opportunity to remind the residents of Daly City that the street numbering on the curbs is being done by unemployed ex-service men of this community, trying to make a few dollars. The small amount they charge for this work is to feed their families and prompt payment will be appreciated. Daly City Legionnaires out of work should apply to Comrade Shaw for work.

Every World War veteran who has found it impossible to convert his five-year government term insurance to a form carrying a higher premium, as has happened to thousands in the last few months due to most of the policies reaching the five-year limit, can now continue the insurance for another five years, at only a slightly higher rate, Jack Mockler, post commander of the American Legion here, said on receipt of advice from national headquarters in Indianapolis, Ind.

The bill extending the renewal of the five-year level premium term life insurance policies for another additional five-year period, without the requirement of a medical examination, has been passed, and President Hoover has signed it. Radiograms telling of it to all regional offices of the Veterans' Administration have gone forward from Washington, Legion officials have been informed.

A most enjoyable evening was spent by the group in dancing and in card playing. At a late hour dainty refreshments were enjoyed by the following: Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Dorn, Mr. and Mrs. Web. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. George Burton, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Clifton, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lewis, Mrs. Edith Abright, Mrs. Claire Pechenino, and Mrs. Ehart.

Foppiano and son Buster, Leo Scadigli, Ed Domenici and Fred Maffei.

MISSION STREET-SAN JOSE AVENUE
HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT IS ASSURED$750,000 TO BE EXPENDED
WORK TO BEGIN PROMPTLY

The proposed assessment of property fronting on Mission street and San Jose avenue, to make up $750,000 needed to complete the financing of widening and improving those streets drew one of the largest crowds ever assembled in Daly City. The large auditorium of the City Hall was filled to capacity last Tuesday evening. The meeting was called by the joint committee of San Francisco and San Mateo county officials for the purpose of ascertaining the willingness of the owners of property fronting on Mission street and San Jose avenue to agree to an assessment not to exceed an average of five dollars per front foot. The favorable response was gratifying indeed.

A brief resume of the activities of the committee may be of interest to those who have not had an opportunity to follow the trend of events. Something over a year ago a meeting was called under the auspices of the Daly City Merchants' Association for the purpose of promoting and aiding the progress of a much needed public improvement. There were present at that meeting the Mayor and other officials of Daly City, Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey and other officials of San Mateo county, Mr. Clyde Healy, assistant city engineer of San Francisco, members of the streets committee of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, and many other officials and interested people from various organizations.

It was quickly ascertained at that meeting that a survey for the improvement had been made, but no funds had been appropriated for the financing of the project. Another and larger meeting was then called to meet in the chambers of the board of supervisors in San Francisco, at which meeting officials and public spirited organizations of San Francisco and San Mateo counties were invited and were in attendance, and the joint committee permanently organized. Fred A. Steinmann, of the Excelsior district, was chosen president and W. H. Clay, of Daly City, was elected secretary. At this meeting it was ascertained that all the funds in the hands of the State Highway Commission for the next biennial had already been allocated to other improvements in various parts of the state, and that apparently nothing could be done until after the next meeting of the State Legislature. However, at the suggestion of Mayor H. H. Smith, of Daly City, and others, it was decided that the committee should go to Sacramento and wait upon Governor James Rolph. The committee was royally received by the Governor, who, incidentally, had taken the pains to have members of the State Highway Commission present, as well as the state engineer and other prominent state officials. This meeting was not very successful, but the committee was told to come back in about a month.

The committee returned to the capital again by appointment, and this time went before the State Highway Commission. Again it looked as though we were doomed to disappointment on the same grounds of "No funds available," until the commission had heard the argument put forth by Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey, Engineer Clyde Healy, and Mayor H. H. Smith, and others of our committee, whereupon, after considerable discussion among themselves, the State Highway Commission decided that approximately $375,000 could eventually be furnished by them, and $200,000 could be made available at once. At the same time the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco pledged approximately $200,000, and the county of San Mateo, through Supervisor Thomas J. Hickey, appropriated $75,000, Daly City to furnish the balance. Mayor H. H. Smith and Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey afterwards went back to Sacramento and induced the State Highway Commission to appropriate $25,000 more, thus bringing the total to about $400,000, appropriated by the state. Daly City's quota is $75,000, and this will be raised by assessment.

This improvement, coming at this time, will be the greatest thing that ever happened to Daly City. Just think of it; $750,000 to be spent in the near future to give us one of the best highways in the state of California. It means the employment of hundreds of men who are now out of work and sorely in need of assistance; it means the purchase of supplies in Daly City; the spending of thousands of dollars in this city; the beginning of building, the expansion of trade, and the end of hard times; at least for many needy people who are now begging for work.

OLD GLORY POST
ELECT DELEGATES

The regular meeting of Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Old Glory Auxiliary, was held last Friday evening in the Masonic hall with a good crowd in attendance.

The principal topic of the evening was the report of the delegates from the State Encampment at Vallejo.

The next important subject was the nomination and election of delegates and alternates to the National Encampment to be held in Sacramento, August 28 to September 2.

Comrades Walter Dorn, Dave Raffetti and Howard Clifton were chosen as delegates, with Earle Nesby, G. Jones and W. S. Erratt as alternates.

Della Campbell and Florence Nesby were chosen as delegates, with Louise Crowley and Mrs. Erratt as alternates, to Sacramento from the Ladies' Auxiliary.

Comrade Collins reports the next Old Glory dance to be given in City Hall on August 27. Remember the last one. Well, lets make this one bigger and better. Put your shoulder to the wheel and help the dance committee make this a success.

Comrade Allen is out of the Dog-House and wants to know about the tickets for the grocery orders.

Comrades Dorn, Raffetti, Allen, Campbell and Clifton attended the five county inter-county council at San Jose on Saturday night. They all enjoyed the trip if the eats were bum. Better luck next time.

On Monday evening eighteen members of the Post and Auxiliary paid their monthly visit to the Red Cross Hut at the Presidio. The evening was spent playing cards with the boys from the hospital wards. The coffee and sandwiches went over big and they all wanted to know when we would return.

Don't forget the big dance on August 27. Bigger and better; snappy music.

Next meeting will be held Friday, August 22. Have you your recruit? If not, why not? Degree team will put on the work.

EAGLES DEFEATED
BY MOUNTAIN VIEW

The crowd that gathered at Jefferson high school last Sunday were treated to a real ball game. Our local Eagle team was defeated by Mountain View, 5 to 3. Going into the ninth inning our boys lead 3 to 2. With two outs in the ninth, Ford, Eagle pitcher, lost control, walking two batters. A home run followed, snatching victory away from the local team, after being in the lead throughout the game.

Both teams played great baseball. Martinez, at second base for Mountain View played a great game. His home run in the ninth topped off a big day for him. Hawley, for the Eagles, also scored a home run to put his team in front, 1 to 0, in the fourth inning. Gundersen and Walsh, two new players, played great ball. Jay Walsh is no stranger to our baseball park, having held down first base for the Daly City Merchants.

Another great game should result this coming Sunday, when the Luxor Cabs will oppose the Eagles at Jefferson High at 2 P. M.

the local resident espied the apparatus he shrank back in horror, stating indignantly that if the truth be known he had a bug in his ear and wanted the statement accepted literally. The doctor hazarded a whiff of the patient's breath and learned that Mr. Pechenino was not one of the four out of five who have it. Armed with the astounding knowledge that he had to deal with a sober man, he went to work on the auricular organ. Twenty minutes of blowing, excavation and placer mining finally rewarded the medical man with a small gray moth, who materially substantiated Mario's assertion that he had a bug in his ear.

OFFICIALS IRED BY CLAIMS OF LEAGUE

Claims of the so-called Federated Voters' League of California to "political power" in San Mateo county has officials and political candidates up in arms.

County Surveyor James S. James, whom the league claims to have supported in 1930, recently aimed a two-fisted blow at the organization. Mr. James denied any affiliation with the league or that he intended to aid its campaign in the approaching election. "If they helped me two years ago, it's the first I heard of it," said Mr. James. "The league's claim to political power is in my mind a good example of the wrong kind of politics, and this sort of thing ought to be stopped."

Mr. James said he received a letter from the league, signed by J. Arthur Petersen, of Redwood City, chairman, soliciting a contribution for the league's political campaign.

"Of course I would not think of such a thing," he said.

Colonel Frederick Peterson, of Burlingame, candidate for assemblyman, also received a request from the league for a contribution—$50 in this case.

Colonel Peterson issued a statement, telling what action he took:

"Several days ago I received a request from the Federated Voters' League of California, signed by J. Arthur Petersen, Redwood City, asking me to contribute $50 to his league campaign fund on the promise they would undoubtedly support me. He wanted a deposit immediately and the remainder after the endorsement had been given.

"Having been in politics for many years and knowing how candidates are subjected to this sort of thing, I promptly consigned the request to the scrap basket. I thought at the time it was unfortunate that the man had a name similar to mine, believing there might be some confusion in the minds of those who were not personally acquainted with me.

"I have found this to be the case in some quarters and now I want to say most emphatically that this man and his league are in no way associated with me. I do not even know him."

County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman also received the league's support in 1930, according to its claims. Mr. Hinman denies affiliation with the organization, or that it aided him in any manner whatsoever two years ago.

Bicycle Racing Events
Sunday Create Interest

Every cyclist enthusiast should make an effort to be present at the American final bicycle trials to be held on Sunday, July 17, at 1 P. M., in the Thirty-fourth avenue stadium at Golden Gate Park, where some of the best riders in the history of cycling will be seen in action. This event is being sponsored by the California Bicycle Promotion Association, who have financed the qualifying riders from all over the country. The first four riders to qualify next Sunday in the sixty-two and a half mile road race will represent America in the Olympic road race at Los Angeles in August. The sprint race honors will likely go to Bobby Thomas, of New York, America's 1931 champion, or Steve O'Connor, of San Francisco, a former California champion, who is expected to make a spectacular comeback next Sunday. The general admission of 25 cents entitles the people to park their cars in the center section of the stadium. Miss Marge O'Connor, of Daly City, who is on the publicity committee, will be one of the officials at the race.

July 21 is the Last Day
For Primary Registration

Register today if you wish to vote at the August 30 primary, County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman has warned tardy voters. There are still several thousand persons wishing to vote in the August primary who have failed so far to put their names on the dotted line, he said. July 21 is the last day on which you may register. Daly City voters may register at the office of John J. Fahey, 6284 Mission street, or B. C. Ross, City Clerk, at the City Hall. Colma voters may register at the office of J. T. Casey.

SCOUTS ARE GUESTS OF AMERICAN LEGION

Through the courtesy of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, the entire membership of the Daly City District Committee, Boy Scouts of America, was invited to participate in their meeting held last Friday evening, July 8, at the Woodrow Wilson school.

Chairman Arthur J. Bodien presented a very interesting story of the Scout movement in Daly City, from its infancy up to the present date, describing the various functions and activities in which the Scouts and Cubs of this city have taken part. He also placed before the assembly a graphic picture of the ideals and ethics of scouting, emphasizing the necessity of training the boys of today in Americanism, so that they may be prepared to perform the civic duties required of them when they become the citizens of tomorrow.

The main speaker of the evening, District Commissioner L. W. Johnston, electrified the audience with startling revelations of the Boy Scout origin, which dates back thirty-two years ago. According to the story, as presented by Mr. Johnston, the Scout movement had its inception during the year 1900, when Lord Baden-Powell, then an officer in the British army, conceived the idea of training certain selected men for Scout duty. So that these men might be distinguished from the balance of the command, it was necessary to choose a different uniform from those worn by the other soldiers and one that would be adapted to the type of service the Scouts would perform. A uniform similar to that now worn by the Boy Scouts was decided upon.

Shortly after this idea was put in force and several hundred British soldiers became first-class Scouts. Great Britain became engaged in actual warfare with the Boers. It was during this period of strife that the original idea of Boy Scouts was formed, which eventually was adopted by Lord Baden-Powell as the fundamental principles of Scouting. Many young boys offered their services to their country to perform special detail duties, such as delivering messages, running errands, etc., in order that the able-bodied men may be relieved for service at the front. Upon his return to England, Lord Baden-Powell foresaw the possibilities of forming a large group of boys, who would be trained, not for war, but for service in the upbuilding and preservation of their country. He was laughed at by many for his so-called vision, but decided, in the face of ridicule to give the matter a test. He gathered together a group of about twenty boys, ranging in age from 12 to 16 years and proceeded to spend a two weeks camping trip in a wooded section of England. The experiment proved to be such a success that many prominent people became interested in the undertaking and formed what is known as the British Boy Scouts Association.

The idea was brought to America about 1911 by an American visitor to England who became interested in the movement through an incident that impressed him very much. While walking the streets of London during a foggy evening the American visitor became lost, and endeavoring to locate himself in the mist, he was surprised to feel a tap on the shoulder. Turning sharply he came face to face with a newsboy who greeted him with a cheery smile. The newsboy enquired if the American visitor was lost and upon being informed that he was, offered to guide him to his hotel. On reaching the hotel the American offered the newsboy a shilling for his trouble, but was quite surprised to receive a reply from the newsboy something like this: "No thank you, sir; I cannot accept your money. I am a Boy Scout who is pledged to do at least one good turn each day and this is my good turn for today. Good night, sir." The American inquired of the interested parties in Scouting and after making a study of the movement, brought the idea to this country.

We have many such Scouts in Daly City, who are always willing to do their daily good turn. Even though it may be small and passed as unnoticed by the grown-ups, it registers in the heart of the Scout just the same when he performs his daily courtesy. Therefore, we ask that you encourage the Scouts in their work and help them to help you.

LEGISLATIVE SPECIAL SESSION TO BE HELD

A special session of the California legislature will be called within the next two months to consider the proposed $375,000,000 state wide water conservation and flood control program. This was made known following a meeting of Governor Rolph and 250 members of his state wide commission. The governor announced an overwhelming majority had voted in favor of the special legislative session. "I will confer immediately with Attorney General U. S. Webb," Rolph said, "and put the necessary legal machinery in motion. The session will be called as soon as possible, I hope within the next forty-five days." The motion which was passed at the meeting calls for the submission of a constitutional amendment at the November election which would create a water commission to administer the project, and would set up financial machinery to raise $160,000,000 to build the first units.

LASSEN PARK SEASON TO OPEN NEXT WEEK

Newest among California's national parks and unique among the nation's playgrounds, Lassen Volcanic National Park will open its season with "Lassen Park Week," July 18 to 24, reports the California State Automobile Association. The Lassen Loop highway, extending across the park and passing close to many of its major attractions, has been cleared of winter snows and is now open the entire distance. With Lassen Peak, the only active volcano in the United States, and a variety of other volcanic phenomena, combined with unusual scenic beauty, Lassen Park offers an array of interesting features for the visitor.

Lassen was dedicated as a national park only last year. The Loop highway is a new route, opening to the enjoyment of motorists a wilderness area that formerly was accessible only to the hardy hiker and trail rider. From Mineral, on the Lassen Volcanic highway, the Loop highway leads from the southwest entrance of the park up over the shoulder of Lassen Peak, past Emerald Lake, Lake Helen, and Summit Lake, thence through Devastated Area, with its evidences of the last eruption; down Lost Creek to the Old Emigrant Trail, and over the divide to the western front, at Manzanita Portal.

The scenic values of the park are unfolded in a striking panorama by a trip over the Loop highway. The motorist views the ruggedness of a wild volcanic country, passes through regions of boiling springs, fumaroles, and mud pots, then rides along deep canyons and finally ascends the slope of Lassen Peak. Descending from the higher altitudes, on the north side of the park, a different picture is seen, with great stands of timber forming a covering mantle of rolling mountains and spreading far into the distance.

Lassen Peak is easily climbed by the average person. A new trail runs from the Loop Highway just above Lake Helen to the peak of the 10,453 foot mountain.

ADVERTISING AND BANK DEPOSITS

The following editorial appeared in the San Francisco Call-Bulletin on July 7:

"When A. P. Giannini returned to the Bank of America as chairman of its board of directors, he called the advertising staff together and told them that he wanted the Bank of America to do something constructive, something in a big way that would be helpful to California, his native state. 'He said that we need not worry if other banks profited as a result of our advertising effort; we would derive our just share anyway, and even if we did not the prosperity of other banks and the state, generally, could not help but bring better times to our own institution.'"

The two paragraphs, just above, were spoken by Peter Michelson, advertising manager of the Bank of America, at a recent session of the American Institute of Banking.

You have seen the results of Mr. Giannini's desire to "do something constructive . . . that would be helpful to California" in the series of display advertisements that have been running for many weeks in California newspapers. But you may not know the results of that bank's "Back to Good Times" campaign.

Since March 12 the number of Bank of America depositors has increased 130,000, and the total deposits jumped $51,000,000.

That bank, all banks, all businesses, all California, profit by this advertised display of confidence and optimism.

Rockne Registrations Increase 29 Percent

A 25 per cent gain in Rockne registrations for May over April—against a gain of only 8.6 per cent for the industry as a whole for the same period—is reported by F. L. Wiethoff, sales manager of Rockne Motors Corporation.

"A comparison of the Rockne gain against the industry gain shows Rockne exceeding the industry by 237.2 per cent—a particularly impressive showing considering the fact that our product has been on the market only a few months, and that we had no army of previous Rockne owners ready to buy the new Rockne car," Wiethoff said.

"Another impressive showing is that of Rockne for the year to date. February registrations exceeded January by 45.4 per cent; March gained 96.3 per cent over February, and April jumped 104.6 per cent over March.

"May not only showed a 29 per cent gain over April, but also the phenomenal increase of 628.6 per cent over January. June shipment figures and deliveries by dealers indicate that June registrations will show a further substantial gain over May."

WILL DEDICATE WAR MEMORIAL ON SEPT. 9

More than one thousand veteran units throughout California will send representatives to the dedication of San Francisco's six million dollar War Memorial on September 9, it has been announced by Thomas M. Foley, executive chairman of the dedication committee.

In addition, nearly twenty special trains of Legionnaires enroute to the American Legion convention at Portland will be routed through San Francisco for the ceremonies, which will start Labor Day, September 5, and be climaxed by the dedication program of California's Admission Day, September 9.

World war veterans will be joined by veterans of other wars, by state and municipal officials, by the Native Sons, and by civic, labor, fraternal, religious and patriotic groups in the dedication of the War Memorial, which is the largest in the West.

A general call for all veteran organizations to name their delegates as early as possible has been issued by Foley.

The new War Memorial, erected at San Francisco's Civic Center, consists of two buildings, a Civic Opera House and a Veterans' and Museum building which will house state and local offices of all veteran organizations.

New Veterans Hospital To Be Built at Fort Miley

Bids for the construction of the new United States Veterans Hospital at Fort Miley, San Francisco, will be asked for about September 1, according to advices received from Washington by B. W. Black, state chairman of the American Legion's rehabilitation commission. Building operations are expected to start a month later and the structure completed within nine months.

The new hospital will have beds for approximately 225 patients and will be the diagnostic center for sick veterans from the eleven western states. The building will also house the regional office of the Veterans Bureau, which is at present located in a down town office building.

World's Largest Outdoor Card Party Set for Ripon

What is heralded as the "World's Largest Outdoor Card Party" will be held in Ripon, San Joaquin county, on Saturday evening, July 16. More than six thousand persons are expected to attend, half of whom will play while the other half will act as kibitzers. Card tables will be placed along the town's main street, which will be made as bright as day by a special installation of electric lights.

The "World's Largest Outdoor Card Party" has grown out of a whist tournament started four years ago by the Ripon post of the American Legion. It soon became too big for the Legion to handle alone and now is virtually a community affair, with all civic and fraternal organizations in the town taking an active part in the arrangements. The program has been broadened to include bridge and pedro as well as whist, and a street dance follows the tourney.

Besides providing entertainment for residents for miles around, this unique event has served to advertise California's balmy climate to the nation. News dispatches carry descriptions of it to all parts of the country and photographs show women playing without wraps and men comfortable in their shirt sleeves until after 2 A. M.

For the benefit of those planning to motor to the outdoor card party, Ripon is located on Highway No. 99 between Stockton and Modesto.

Public Whipping Penalty For Setting Forest Fires

Persons responsible for forest fires were severely punished in this country as far back as 250 years ago. In 1676 the Duke of York, brother of King Charles II of England, set heavy fines of public whippings as the penalty for allowing fires to get beyond control in the forests of Pennsylvania. The guilty person was required to pay for all damage caused, plus half of the amount as a fine. If he was unable to pay he was publicly lashed.

Leading economists agree that a complete change of mental attitude on the part of each individual will help more to restore good times than any other factor . . . Bank of America's great statewide "Back-to-Good-Times" campaign has caused many thousands of wideawake Californians to make an economic right-about-face . . . They have discarded the old blue glasses of negative thinking, shed their needless fears, and have regained their courage and confidence . . . The next important step is to put all our unemployed back to work by circulating every idle dollar through our banks and business houses . . . A working dollar is more useful than a million in cold storage. It helps to build homes, keep factories busy, create business activity, finance agricultural interests, and keep ships and freight cars moving . . . The silver lining is already visible—and a change of mental attitude—a return to normal habits of buying and living and thinking will make everyone see it.

The Division of Highways have awarded four contracts, totaling $68,153, for work in San Diego, San Mateo, Shasta and Lassen counties.

The volume of water allowed consumers in Manteca for the months of July, August and September has been increased from 600 to 1000 cubic feet, according to announcement made by city officials. The minimum charge of $1.50 will be maintained. The rate of 10 cents per hundred cubic feet in excess of the minimum will also be continued.

E. I. Feemster, Visalia, was defeated for re-election as president of the California Peach and Fig Association at a stormy session at Fresno recently. George E. Reynolds, Oroshi, was elected to the post. Members of the association voted against both Feemster and E. A. Hawkins, San Francisco, who angrily denounced the president for allegedly not permitting the San Franciscan to qualify as a candidate for director. Hawkins ran as a "write in" candidate but was not elected.

The threat of the alfalfa weevil to San Joaquin Valley was discussed at a county-wide meeting of alfalfa growers at the Farm Bureau offices at Visalia recently. The meeting was called by Frank R. Bram, Tulare county Agricultural Commissioner. Infestation has been found in San Joaquin county, but it was reported that extensive inspection of Tulare county's 60,000 acres of alfalfa had revealed no traces of the weevil.

The State Railroad Commission has approved the abandonment and discontinuance of service at stations of the following railroad companies: Southern Pacific Company—Eggers, Fresno county; Wright, Santa Clara county; Tehama, Tehama county; Templeton, San Luis Obispo county; Bradley, Monterey county. Tidewater Southern Railway—Ahlen, Merced county; Chatham and Leedom, Stanislaus county. Central California Traction Company—Lodi, San Joaquin county. Sunset Railway Company—Maricopa, Kern county. The Railway Express Agency was given authority to close its agencies at Wright, Tehama and Templeton.

California set a new record during the last year with a distinct decrease in industrial accidents. It was reported to Governor Rolph that the total casualty list was 230,515 for 1931, a drop of 41,003, or 15 per cent, compared with 1930. The drop, however, is largely accounted for by decreased employment. French's report classified the injuries as follows: Deaths, 447, decrease of 25 per cent; permanent injuries, 748, decrease of 12 per cent; temporary injuries, 68,851, decrease of 14 per cent; no-disability cases, 160,439. Analyzing the deaths by industries, French said the list was headed by seventy-six in public utility operations, fifty in engineering construction and forty-five in agriculture.

Acting on the plea of farmers, cannery operators and packing plant owners, an emergency reduction in the minimum wage scale for women employees has been granted by the division of industrial relations, state department of industrial relations. Under the new scale the minimum scale for women in the state will be 20 cents an hour for unskilled and 25 cents for skilled labor. Formerly employers were compelled by law to pay women from 30 to 35 cents an hour. With the wage scale for male labor lowered 15 to 17½ cents an hour, many women faced loss of work under the old scale. Packing plant owners had announced that they would be compelled to replace the women workers with men unless the rate of pay was lowered. The reduction has the approval of Sonoma county Grange.

"California cannot call a debt moratorium unless all the other states do likewise," Governor Rolph declared recently in commenting on Superior Judge Daniel C. Deasy's suggestion for a debt holiday to rescue thousands of individuals who face loss of their homes. "It is a matter for the President or for Congress," he said. As a means of helping the debt-ridden, however, the governor declared his administration would sponsor a bill in the next Legislature to limit loans to the actual value of property put up as collateral in order to put a halt to the "abuse of deficiency judgments." "As things are now," the governor explained, "if the collateral property does not pay the debt, the creditor can go beyond such property and obtain a deficiency judgment for the balance. Under the proposed bill the creditor would only be entitled to whatever the security property would bring."

City Traffic Officer Edward J. Pragna was appointed chief of police of Willow Glen at a special city council meeting. He succeeds Paul J. Smith, who resigned as chief to enter private business. Dwight Salisbury will succeed Chief Pragna as a traffic officer.

The Sonoma County Grape and Hop Growers' Association has asked all public officials, public school teachers and other public employees to take a voluntary cut in salaries, ranging from 5 to 15 per cent.

Oroville is one of the "wettest" cities in upper California. Roy Nelson, local manager for the California Water Service Co., is authority for this statement. Nelson said that local residents use 5,000,000 gallons of water daily in the summer time and one million gallons of water in the winter. The per capita consumption of water per day is 300 gallons.

A genuine mining camp such as flourished in the gold rush days of 1849 in the Marysville section, is now thriving at Rice's crossing in the Yuba county mountains, according to reports. With the depression creating much unemployment, many have taken to the hills prospecting, and a large number of supposedly "worked out" mines have been re-opened and supplied with new equipment. As a result, Rice's crossing now has a sizeable mining population and even Saturday night dances are in vogue.

Although not far removed from counties where the pest has gained a decided foothold, Alameda county is comparatively free from the obnoxious puncture vine, and with a strong organization formed to guard against it, it is doubtful if it ever will become a real menace there, according to Wilbur Schrader, horticultural inspector for this section. Regular inspections and surveys of fields and highways are made under the direction of Schrader to spot the weed, while agriculturists in all parts of the county have been contacted to report immediately presence of the pest. Use of oils has been found satisfactory in killing the noxious growth. The puncture vine is particularly annoying to animals, mixing with hay and causing mouth irritation in stock. Also it is a menace to children running around barefooted and to dogs, cats and other pets.

In an appeal decision in San Francisco, the state supreme court has ruled that autos being used by narcotics act violators cannot be impounded by the government unless they are the actual property of the violator. The decision declares unconstitutional, an amendment to the Fourteenth Amendment in the constitution under which autos used by narcotics act violators might be impounded regardless of their ownership. The action was taken as a test case in the matter of Philip K. Broad, convicted violator, whose auto was ordered impounded. A motor car company from whom Broad was buying the auto on time payments protested the order but lost their action before Superior Judge Lyle T. Jacks. The district court of appeals, however, reversed Judge Jacks' decision, and the state then took an appeal to the state supreme court, which has now declared unconstitutional, the right of the government to impound autos not owned by the actual violator.

California's prison population is 7945. San Quentin has 5204 and Folsom 2741. These figures, which include the 513 prisoners who are in road camps, are released by Charles L. Neumiller, president of the State Board of Prison Directors. Despite the paroles which are granted monthly, the population is growing. Folsom, which is badly overcrowded, is putting in a foundation for a new cell-house. The report shows a total of 3156 prisoners on parole at the close of May. Adding this total to the 7945 inmates in the prisons, there were 11,101 prisoners under the supervision of the prison directors. This is a number that the two prisons could not accommodate. The earnings of the prisoners on parole at the end of May were $236,661. During May, 112 prisoners were released from San Quentin on parole and thirty-two from Folsom. There were five violations of parole during the month, and 108 prisoners, who had been reporting to the parole officer and otherwise keeping their records good, were released permanently as their paroles expired.

State of California expects to gain Federal financial aid, State Highway engineer Purcell said, toward alleviation of the unemployment problem next winter. Purcell returned recently from Washington, where he helped California members of Congress on certain state aid legislation. The engineer said Congress has legislation before it providing financial aid for Federal highways and lands in California. One provision would give $4,500,000 emergency funds for improvement of roads in California. This would be in addition to a like sum already given if matched by the state. Purcell said the state has spent all but $200,000 of the latter sum in carrying out its legislative emergency unemployment program. Another provision carries a $1,100,000 appropriation for roads through Federal forests in California and still a third appropriates $300,000 for improvement of public lands in this state. If all these pass and are approved by the President, Purcell said, they will enable California to carry through another construction program similar to that of last winter, when approximately 4500 unemployed men were given work.

Farm population of the United States showed a net gain of 208,000 during 1930, to reach a total of 27,430,000 January 1, 1931, Department of Agriculture figures show, according to the San Francisco Real Estate Board. Since California has 5 per cent of the Nation's population, her net gain, according to the board, would be about 10,000 or 11,000 in farmers.

A drive to sign up 210,000 acres of raisin vineyards in the San Joaquin Valley has been started by the California Raisin Pool.

STORY FOR YOUNG FOLKS

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

Don't count your chickens till they're hatched. Nor eat your dinner till you get it. Don't try to fly till you get wings. Nor wash your face until you wet it.

LONGLEGS the heron stood among the rushes on the edge of the Smiling Pool and his eyes were bright with joy. Just a little way out in front of him a school of minnows were at play and little by little they were drawing nearer and nearer. Longlegs knows all about minnows. He knows just how headless and careless they are when at play, and he knows that they dearly love to play among the bulrushes. You see, when Longlegs isn't about they are safer there than anywhere else, and they know it. Out in the deep water live big fish who are quite as fond of minnows as Longlegs himself, but where the bulrushes grow the water is very shallow. It is not deep enough for the big fish, but plenty deep enough for little minnows. Then, too, there is always plenty to eat there.

So Longlegs felt sure that these minnows he was watching would soon come swimming around his very feet, for he knew that they did not know that he was there. He had waited so long that his stomach was so empty that he felt as if the bottom was dropping out of it. Not so much as a single pollywog had shown itself. This was because Grandfather Frog had seen Longlegs when he arrived and had warned the pollywogs to keep away from where he was. You know the pollywogs are Grandfather Frog's children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. So when at last Longlegs saw those minnows he was happy. He felt absolutely sure of at least one of them, and he meant to pick out the biggest and fattest.

Now it is one of the laws of the Great World that no one can be sure of a thing until he has it. People think they are sure of things. Buster Bear thought he was sure of all the honey in Busy Bee's storehouse, but you remember what happened. He had eaten half of it when Farmer Brown's Boy gave him such a fright that he ran away, leaving the other half. More than once Reddy Fox has thought he was sure of catching Peter Rabbit, only to have Peter get away most unexpectedly. Then there was the time when Little Mr. Striped Snake caught one of the children of Sticky-toes the Tree toad and had already begun to swallow him. He had every reason to think that he was sure of little Sticky-toes, but along came Farmer Brown's Boy and made him cough up little Sticky-toes. So you see it is of no use to even think you are sure of anything until you have it where it cannot get away or be taken away from you. The only time you can be sure of a dinner is when it is in your stomach.

Longlegs knew this. Anyway he ought to have known it. But the fact, the plain fact, remains that he thought he was sure of one of those minnows. He could almost feel the comfortable sensation of one of them wriggling down his long throat to his empty stomach. Nearer the careless minnows came, and nearer. The head of Longlegs was drawn back ready to be shot forward with the speed of lightning. The biggest, fattest minnow was lazily swimming straight toward him and was almost within reach.

Right then something happened. Out from the Big Hickory Tree on the bank of the Smiling Pool flew another fisherman. He was not very big. He wore a pointed cap which made his head look too big for his body, and he was modestly but handsomely dressed in blue and gray and white. Straight out right over the school of minnows he flew, and for just a second seemed to stand still in the air. There was a silvery splash and then up he came with the biggest, fattest minnow in his stout bill. With a harsh rattling cry of triumph he flew back to the Big Hickory Tree, where he thumped the minnow on a branch and then began to gulp it down head first. It was Rattles the Kingfisher.

Of course all the other minnows darted away in great fright, while poor Longlegs could only stare across at that breakfast he had thought he was so sure of, and which was now going down the throat of Rattles the Kingfisher.

DIET AND FOOD

AFTER all the advice from various diet experts as to reduction of fat, if we simmer it down to the reasonable and normal conclusion, we find that if one is overweight, we need less food and more exercise. Less food does not mean that we should change our mode of living, or give up the foods we like, but cut down on the amount. Leave the table with the feeling that you could eat more, and would really enjoy more; but refrain. Such is good discipline for both the body and the mind. The Chinese, healthy, long-lived and normal in weight, eat one food mostly. The single diet, that is their secret. In Russia cabbage is the main dish. One of the evils of our modern civilized life is the complexity and mixtures that we make of food.

Look at the large families of healthy children if there are any large families in your neighborhood; note their diet. One family of nine, with seven healthy, rugged, bright-minded children would have for a noon meal such a one as this: When green peas were plentiful, they made a meal of cooked peas with bread and butter. When strawberries were in season strawberry shortcake would be the whole meal for the nine. All had all they wanted and everybody was satisfied and needed nothing more.

Every one of those children is well and doing his or her part in the world's work. They were poor, but never made any apologies if a friend dropped in at meal time; he was as welcome as if they were serving a feast, which it was, to every guest.

How simple we could make our meals if we followed the single diet; what a saving on the housewife and wear and tear on our stomachs. But of course we hear some one say, I cannot eat strawberries and it doesn't run in our family to like cabbage? Well, pick out the food you do like; there should be many, and give a day to the enjoyment of each, or even a meal of one food now and then. (© 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE UNKNOWN SCOUT

At a meeting of the Boy Scouts of America in Washington, a bronze buffalo medal was awarded to "The Unknown Scout." The inspiration of this award was an unknown Boy Scout in London, who may be living today. This briefly, is the story:

Some years ago, William D. Boyce, a Chicago publisher, lost his way in a London fog. A young lad noticing his embarrassment approached him and briskly saluting said: "May I be of service to you?" Mr. Boyce inquired the way to his destination and the lad showed him the way. Reaching the place Mr. Boyce offered the boy a shilling for his service, but the boy said: "I am a Scout, and Scouts do not accept tips for courtesies."

Mr. Boyce was interested and impressed. He asked about the Scouts. His young friend took him to the office of Sir Robert Baden-Powell, founder of the movement, and as a result when Mr. Boyce later sailed for home he brought a trunk full of literature pertaining to scouting. Then he started the Boy Scout movement in America, with the aid of others who recognized the value of such training as it affords.

The medal awarded to "The Unknown Scout," who befriended Mr. Boyce and thus caused the spread of scouting in America, was presented to the International Scout Bureau in London, where it will be kept as a permanent memorial. It is inscribed as follows:

"To the Unknown Scout, whose faithfulness in the performance of the daily good turn brought the Scout movement to the United States of America."

Perhaps never has a simple act of kindness brought forth greater or more beneficial results than that performed by this unknown London Boy Scout.

"Psychological pharmacodynamics" is the name of a new science dealing with mental diseases. And trying to spell it may drive many a linotyper and proofreader crazy.

Both parties are said to face the campaign with confidence. Anyway, they may be confident that voters will not take platforms or campaign promises too seriously.

Someone has suggested a "Think More Week." It would be a noble experiment for a good many people.

There will never really be a "forgotten man" so long as he has anything that can be taxed.

LATIN-AMERICAN PROBLEM

Republican leaders at the Chicago convention were doubtless justified in pointing to the good will of the Latin-American republics as one bright spot in the record of the present administration, for changes in attitude toward our neighboring republics have been applauded by the Latin-American press.

A fairer interpretation of the Monroe doctrine and a repudiation of the principle of armed protection of our private interests in the Caribbean have contributed to this rapprochement.

But most of all, our sister republics have been gratified by a reversal of the policy of non-recognition of revolutionary governments. "From now on," said Secretary Stimson, "any government which is the expression of popular will, even if born of revolution, and which is able to assure internal order and protection to foreign lives and property will be recognized by the United States." This was a reversal of a former policy but was a return to the true democratic principle of Thomas Jefferson.

But campaign orators may find one vulnerable spot even in this record. While new governments set up by revolutions in South America may be recognized as soon as they have demonstrated their stability, the five republics of Central America are subjected to different rules because of a treaty which they signed in Washington in 1923 aimed to outlaw revolutions. Although the United States is not a party to that treaty, we have refused to recognize the present government of El Salvador, headed by General Martinez, who as the vice-president assumed the presidency when President Araujo was forced to flee from the country because of his poor record in office.

A RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

It is amazing how little wild talk there has been during the depression on the part of labor and the political parties of dissent.

There have been no strikes, no threats of reprisals. Labor, speaking generally, has shown a disposition to bear its share of the burdens that have fallen on all alike. Widespread unemployment and an unavoidable drop in the average wage scale—a drop which has been somewhat compensated by lower commodity prices—have not shaken the faith of an overwhelming percentage of workers in the stability of the government and the ability of industry to work its way out of its troubles.

BRIGHT BUT LAZY

Of the many thousands of high school graduates who have received their diplomas this year, New York claims the brightest in the person of Ellen Elizabeth Benson, who has finished her work preparatory for college at the age of 12.

Several stories of her precocity are told. At eight months she startled a physician who was examining her in a health contest by saying: "Baby wants dinner." At 16 months a physiological test showed her to have a vocabulary of 150 words. At 3 years she could read, although no effort had been made to teach her. She is now declared to have the mental capacity of a girl of 19.

All these accomplishments would naturally convey the impression that Ellen Elizabeth is an indefatigable student and worker. But let her tell about that for herself:

"No, I don't like to study. I just read and remember. And I'm lazy about housework. Just ask mother."

Little Miss Benson may make a mark in the world and then again she may not. Many precocious youngsters revert to mediocrity in later life, because they are too lazy to make use of their natural gifts.

WHAT DOES BLOOD TELL?

Students of heredity might find something worthy of investigation in the history of the Hubert family, negroes of Georgia. It is perhaps one of the most remarkable on record.

Zach and Camilla Hillman Hubert were born in slavery and had little education, but by hard struggle and self denial they managed to educate their seven sons. This is what they enabled their seven boys to become:

Zachary Hubert, Jr., president of the Jackson College, Jackson, Miss.; B. F. Hubert, director of agriculture at Tuskegee Institute; John W. Hubert, principal of the negro high school in Savannah; J. H. Hubert, executive secretary of the Urban League in New York City; Moses Hubert, farm demonstration agent of Hancock county, Georgia; G. J. Hubert, pastor of two churches in Atlanta and owner of a 600-acre farm; Theodore Hubert, the youngest son, a senior at Morehouse College, Atlanta. Was it heredity that enabled these seven negro farm boys to reach such positions of honor and usefulness? What does blood tell in this case?

FOUNDATION OF PROSPERITY

When national publications are appearing at one-half to one-third of their inflated, post-war size, the Byron Times, published by Harry Hammond, at Byron, California, comes out with its 166-page 1932-1933 de luxe development edition showing the record of progress that is being made in Central California.

It would pay anyone to read this edition just to see that the future of the United States does not depend on the stock market or the politicians—its destiny lies in the hands of the producers of the products which provide necessities for our 125,000,000 population, as well as a large part of the rest of the world.

This special edition pictures in minutest details the activities that maintain the payrolls, provide the food and clothing and furnish the taxes to maintain government. Anyone reading it can see what a wonderful work a live publisher in a farming and manufacturing community can do to build public pride in local institutions and industries.

California owes a debt of gratitude to Editor Hammond and his able co-workers who have brought to the front such a record of assets upon which the future and prosperity of this nation rest and will go forward.

A FAMOUS OPERATION

Forty years ago a candidate for the presidency of the United States was suffering from cancer of the mouth. But the fact was known only to himself and his physicians, and he was elected. The story of this remarkable case is recorded by the recent death of Dr. W. M. Keel, who assisted in performing a secret operation on the distinguished patient.

Shortly after entering upon his second term as president in 1893, and during the panic of that year, Grover Cleveland's condition became such as to necessitate surgical aid. Fearing public knowledge that he was afflicted with cancer would further depress the economic situation, Cleveland arranged to have an operation performed secretly.

This was done on the yacht Oneida, owned by Commodore E. C. Benedict, while cruising in the waters of Long Island Sound. A part of the president's left jaw and a portion of his palate were cut away as the yacht slowly steamed along. In five days he was able to walk ashore from what was supposed to be merely a recreation cruise. What had really happened was never publicly known until Dr. Keel related the story in 1917.

President Cleveland served out his term, as everybody knows, and lived until 1908, some 15 years after the operation had been performed. A vulcanized rubber substitute for the removed jawbone had aided him in keeping his secret.

FAT FOLK SWINDLED

Due to the present feminine craze for slim figures, thousands of women are being swindled by vendors of alleged fat-reducing preparations, which have no value whatsoever.

Put up in the form of "fat reducing chewing gum," or "fat reducing gum drops," some of these fake cures are quite attractive, but several of them which have been analyzed were found to contain nothing conducive to slenderness except a drug having a slight laxative effect.

These reducing remedies are usually accompanied by instructions to eat only half as much food as usual, to take long walks, and be sparing in the use of bread and potatoes. Following these directions would tend to secure the desired result, of course, without the chewing gum and gum drops.

Doctors tell us that it isn't healthy for fat people to be slim, anyway. "Be yourself!" is their advice.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla. United States Senator W. Warren Barbour, of New Jersey, says:

"A live interest on the part of each and every citizen of voting age in the management of the nation's affairs is essential for the continuance of our nation in the position it occupies at the present time."

"By that I mean that if citizens do not worry how much their public officials spend, or if they are careless in the type of officials they elect, or, once having elected good officials fail to keep tabs on how they conduct themselves in their management of the public office, the future would not hold much for us."

"A chain is as strong as its weakest link, and a nation—particularly a Republic—is only as strong as the citizens make it."

"Keep informed of the doings of your Congress and your state legislatures. Let your representatives know you are interested."

"If you fail in this, you will help destroy the fundamental premise of representative government."

AN INVESTMENT FOR LABOR

A dollar spent for road building is mostly an investment in labor.

About eighty per cent of road building funds goes into the pockets of workmen, either on the job or in industries providing food, machinery and supplies. It is estimated that during 1931 an average of two million men were employed in road work, which meant a living for some six million persons.

There has never been a better time to build farm-to-market roads than now, when the economic need for improved highways, especially in rural and farming areas, grows more intense. Prices for materials are at extremely low levels. Most important of all is the crying demand for jobs and more jobs for those who are out of work.

Every time a new road is built, or an old one improved in accord with modern design, social and economic progress is made. Fine weather-proof, bituminous surfaced roads can be built for five thousand dollars a mile and less, giving men employment and opening inaccessible areas for settlement.

Alabama scientists have made sugar out of peanut shells. Now let them try making statesmen out of peanut politicians.

The army has developed a two-piece flying suit of horsehide and wool to combat the cold.

LESS WORK FOR WOMEN

The 8-hour day has not reached the farm house. Analysis of 700 typical farm show that the women average 63 working hours per week, according to a nationwide survey. Extension of power lines into rural districts, is making the farm wife's work easier, however, and for the same reasons that town women have been aided by electricity.

Operation of farm houses has been much simplified by three things, according to the survey. These are running water in the kitchen, household washers and electricity. Many women in towns already know the advantages of these, of course, and their country cousins are now getting better acquainted with their benefits. The three advantages mentioned in the survey just about go hand-in-hand when farmers improve conditions for their wives, as one calls for the others.

Town women have cut their hours of work very greatly by using such facilities. It is known, for instance, that a washing machine gets things done in one-third to one-half the time of back-breaking old hand methods. Neither town women nor country women can operate efficiently and economically without modern time and labor saving devices.

No use saying to the bride, "with all my worldly goods I thee endow." She'll get 'em, if any.

"Demand Unbribeable Officials"—Headline. A rather novel idea, but it sounds reasonable at that.

Considerable Damage is Caused by Grass Fire

A dozen giant oaks in Baywood park were damaged and fifty feet of hedge at the George P. Hayne estate, on El Camino Real, destroyed Tuesday afternoon by a spectacular grass fire that burned over nearly ten acres in Baywood, threatened a building on a miniature golf course, covering down town San Mateo with a pall of smoke.

Firemen with 700 feet of hose laid in two lines battled the blaze for two hours in the face of a stiff wind. Efforts of the department kept the flame from spreading into the Cecilia Tobin Clark estate adjoining the Hayne property.

Flames scorched an office building on the golf course at Fifth avenue and El Camino Real and spread into oak trees surrounding the property. The fire, of unknown origin, started along Dartmouth avenue and was carried rapidly toward the Hayne and Clark estate and the Baywood realty office adjoining the golf course.

What to do with old safety razor blades was solved by a Washington man who swallowed ten of them.

YOUTHS CONFESS SERIES OF THEFTS

Confessing, according to police, that they staged a number of burglaries in San Francisco and on the Peninsula, three youths are in the custody of San Mateo county juvenile court authorities after being picked up in Burlingame.

The three youngsters, Wilfred Slattery, 13, Jack Jones, 14, and Donald Standbury, 16, all of San Francisco, were taken to police headquarters after being found riding on the rear bumper of a car traveling north on California drive.

According to Burlingame police, the three admitted taking a coupe in San Francisco, driving to within three miles of Menlo Park, and breaking into a shed and taking oil and gasoline. They were taken to Menlo Park police headquarters, but ran away from the officers, they said. Then they came to San Mateo, broke into a pump house and took milk from another place, according to their story.

In San Francisco, they admitted stealing cigars, cigarettes and candy from a restaurant, robbing a cookie bakery, entering a theatre that had been closed and attempting to break into a hardware store, police said. They implicated four other San Francisco boys.

Water Plant is Granted Increase in Its Rates

The Railroad Commission has authorized C. H. Holt Realty Company to increase the rates upon its water plant serving the Emerald Lake subdivision of San Mateo county.

While authorizing an increase in rates, the Commission states that improvements must be made in the system to correct what the decision describes to be the "low operating efficiency" of the system. "The consumers," the decision states, "should not be penalized for such conditions." The decision also orders that that all consumers be placed upon a metered basis.

The increase will amount to approximately $5,140 a year, and is designed to cover operating and depreciation charges only.

Coast Vegetable Growers Defeated in Rate Fight

Pacific Coast vegetable growers and shippers have lost an eight year fight for reduced freight rates on lettuce and other fresh vegetables shipped in carloads from California and Arizona to Utah, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa and that section lying east of the Mississippi river and north of the Ohio.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has finally dismissed the complaint. It found that the growers had not submitted convincing evidence that carriers are charging too much for either transporting or preserving the "highly perishable" commodity in question.

District Attorney Rules Francia Nomination Legal

Nomination papers of Supervisor Manuel Francia, Half Moon Bay, were held legal in an opinion given last Tuesday by District Attorney Edmund Scott at the request of County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman.

Scott held that sponsors did not have to set forth their occupations and addresses in their own handwriting when signing the papers. He further ruled that use of ditto marks was legal.

A certificate containing the name of a voter, apparently illiterate, who signed his affidavit paper with a cross, can not be disregarded, he said. "The real will of the electors should not be defeated because of one irregular signature if there is sufficient signatures on the certificate to comply with the primary election law," Scott's opinion read.

Judging from the lack of damage done, it seems that both Sharkey and Schmeling pulled their punches, if any.

Aren't men funny. A Nebraskan who hadn't kissed his wife for a year whipped an iceman who had.

SYNOPSIS

In the California sierra Mark King, prospector, sees Andy Parker killed by Swen Brodie, Parker's outlaw companion, both known to King. He is on his way to the summer home of his friend, Ben Gaynor, King and Gaynor share with Brodie and his crowd knowledge of a vast store of gold—Gus Ingle's treasure—hidden in the sierra. King meets Mrs. Gaynor and is impressed by her daughter Gloria's youthful beauty. He instinctively dislikes a house visitor named Gratton.

"What do you suppose?" said Gloria tranquilly. "He would have left you a very rude if he hadn't been thinking of your daughter. Besides, he had very little to do with the matter."

"But you will be gone all day!" "Oh, mamma!" Gloria began to grow impatient. "What if I am? Mr. King is a gentleman, isn't he? He isn't going to eat me, is he? Why do you make such a fuss over it all? Do you want to spoil everything for me?"

"You know I don't! But—" "We've had nothing but 'buts' since I told you. I should have left you a note and slipped out." She bestowed upon the worried face a pecking little kiss and tiptoed to the door.

And while Mrs. Gaynor stared after her she closed the door softly and went tip-toeing down stairs and out into the brightening dawn, where Mark King awaited her with the horses.

From behind a window curtain Gloria's mother watched the girl tripping away through the meadow to the stable, set back among the trees. King lifted Gloria into her saddle; Gloria's little laugh had in it a flutter of excitement as her cavalier's strength took her by delighted surprise and off her feet. They rode away through the thinning shadows. Mrs. Gaynor, despite the earliness of the hour, went straight to her husband, awoke him mercilessly, and told him everything.

"Oh," he said when she had done and he had turned over for another hour or so of sleep, "that's all right. Mark told me about it last night."

"And you didn't say a word to me!" "Forgot," said Ben. "But don't worry. Mark'll take care of her."

She left him to his innocent slumbers and began dressing. Already she was bustled with planning just what to say and how to say it; Gloria knew, she thought with some complacency, that her mother could be depended upon in any situation demanding the delicate touch.

Never had Mark King known pleasant companionship than Gloria Gaynor afforded this bright morning. When they rode side by side she chattered brightly, athrill with animation, vivid with her rioting youth. Yesterday, surrendering her volatile self to a very natural and quite innocent feminine instinct, Gloria had fully determined to parade Mark King before her envious friends as very much her own property. It was merely a bit of the game, the old, old game at which she, being richly favored by nature, was as skillful as a girl of eighteen or nineteen could possibly be. Then she had caught a word between her father and his friend; had heard Honeycutt mentioned and a ride to Coloma, and on the break of the instant had determined with a young will which invariably went unthwarted, that high adventure was beckoning her.

King had telephoned to San Francisco, arranging to have three thousand dollars—in cash—sent immediately to him at Coloma, and today fancied himself strictly attending to business with an undivided mind.

He was not given to many words, grown taciturn as are mountaineers inevitably, trained in long habit to approve in silence of that which pleased him most. So, while Gloria's eager tongue tripped along as busily as the brooks they forded, he was for the most part silent. He chose always the easier trails, since with the good horses under them they had ample time to come to Loony Honeycutt's place well before midday. Also they stopped frequently, King making an excuse of showing her points of interest; the pass into the cliff-bound hiding place of the picturesque highwayman of an earlier day whence they drove stolen horses into Nevada, where they secreted other horses stolen in Nevada and to be disposed of down in the Sacramento valley.

Once, while under the pretext of letting their horses blow, King had suggested a short halt to give the girl a chance to rest, Gloria said with abruptness:

"What do you think of Mr. Gratton?"

Already she knew Mark King well enough to realize that he would either refuse to answer or would speak his mind without beating about the bush. "I don't like him," said King.

Gloria looked thoughtful. "Neither do I," she said. "Not up here in the mountains. And down in San Francisco I thought him rather splendid. What is more, if we were whisked back to San Francisco this minute, I'd probably think him fine again."

She appeared interested in the consideration, and when they rode on was silent, obviously turning the matter over and over in mind.

Today were three mysteries tremblingly close to revealing themselves one to another: the great green mystery of the woodlands; the mystery of a man clothed in his masculinity as in an outer garment; the tender mystery of a young girl, her own thoughts half veiled from herself, her instincts alive and urgent, and often all in confusion. Gloria did not expect to marry Archie or Teddy or Mr. Gratton; she had no thought of being anyone's wife; that term, after all, at Gloria's age, is a drab and humdrum thing. She did not dream of Mark King as a possible husband; another unromantic tale. She merely hungered for male admiration. It was the wine of life, the breath in her nostrils. As it happens to be to some countless millions of other girls. . . . They rode on, side by side, each content with seeing only that which lay on the surface—both of his companion and of himself.

From the first he called her Gloria quite naturally; to her he was Mr. King. But the "Mark" slipped out before they came into sight of the roofs of picturesque Coloma.

"You are sure you won't be gone more than an hour?" Gloria asked.

Never, it seemed to her, had she seen a lonelier-looking place than old Coloma. The street into which they had ridden was deserted save for a couple of dogs making each other's acquaintance suspiciously.

"Less than an hour," he assured her. "What business I have can be done in fifteen minutes if it can be done at all. But, in the meantime, what will you do?"

She Merely Hungered for Male Admiration. It Was the Wine of Life—the Breath in her Nostrils.

"Oh, I'll just poke around."

He put the horses in the stable, watered and fed them himself, and came back to her outside the front double doors.

"Tired much?" he asked solicitously. "Not a bit tired," she told him brightly.

"That's good. But I could get a room for you at the hotel; you could lie down and rest a couple of hours—"

Gloria would not hear of it; if she did want to lie down she'd go out under one of the trees and rest there. She trudged along with him to the post office; she watched as Mark called for and got a registered parcel. She was smiling brightly when Mark King hurried off to his meeting with old Loony Honeycutt.

He realized that his visit to Loony Honeycutt was not likely to pass unnoticed. What he had not counted on was finding Swen Brodie himself before him in Honeycutt's shanty. As he lifted his foot to the first of the three front steps he heard voices. Nor would any man who had once listened to the deep, sullen bass of Swen Brodie have forgotten or have failed now in quick recognition. Brodie's mouth, when he spoke, dripped the vilest of vulgarities that had ever been known in these mountains.

What King heard, as though Brodie had held his speech for the moment and hurled it like a challenge to the man he did not know had come, was, when stripped of its cargo of verbal filth:

"You old fool, you're dying right now. It's for me or Mark King to get it, and it ain't going to be King."

Honeycutt all the time was whining like a feeble spirit in pain, his utterances like the final dwindlings of a mean-spirited dog. Perhaps Brodie as the ultimate argument had manhandled him. King threw open the door.

There stood old Honeycutt, tremblingly upheld upon his sawed-off broom-handle. Beyond him, facing the door, was Swen Brodie, his immense body towering over Honeycutt's spindling one, his bestial face hideous in its contortions as at once he gloated and threatened. In Brodie's hands, which were twice the size of an ordinary man's, was a little wooden box, to which Honeycutt's rheumy eyes were glued with frantic despair. Evidently the box had only now been taken from its hiding place under a loose board in the floor; the board lay tossed to one side, and Brodie's legs straddled the opening.

Honeycutt did not know immediately that anyone had entered; either his old ears had not heard, or his excited mind was concentrated so exclusively on Brodie that he had no thought of aught else. Brodie, however, turned his small, restless eyes, that were like two shiny bright-blue buttons, upon the intruder.

Swen Brodie was the biggest man who had ever come to the mountains, men said, unless that honor went to one of the seven who more than a half-century ago had perished with Gus Ingle. And even so Brodie kept the honor in his own blood, boasting that Ingle's giant companion, the worst of a bad lot, was his own father. The elder Brodie had come from Iceland, had lived with a squaw, had sired the first "Swen" Brodie. And this last scion of a house of outlawry and depravity, the Blue Devil, as many called him, stood six or eight clear inches above Mark King, who was well above six feet. His head was all face, flat-tening off an inch above the hairless brows; his face was all enormous, double-toothed mouth.

Slowly the big mouth closed. The shiny blue eyes narrowed and glinted; the coarse face reddened. Old Honeycutt saw. He began to sputter but Brodie's loud voice had come back to him and drowned out the old man's shrillings. Brodie ripped out a string of oaths, demanding:

"Who told you to come in? You—"

"He was aiming to kill me," cried old Honeycutt, dragging and pulling at King's sleeve. "He was for doin' for me—like that!"

He pointed to the floor. There lay a heavy iron poker bent double.

"You old fool, I'll do you yet," growled Brodie. "And you, King, what are you after?"

Always truculent, today Brodie was plainly spooling for trouble.

"I came for a word with Honeycutt, not with you," King flashed back at him. "And from the look of things Honeycutt is thanking his stars that I did come."

"If you mean anything by that," shouted Brodie threateningly, "put a name to it."

"If it's a fight you want," said King sharply. "I'm ready to take you on, any time, and without a lot of palaver."

Old Honeycutt began sidling off toward the back door, neither of his two visitors noticing him now as their eyes clashed.

"What I come for I'm going to have," announced Brodie. "It's mine, anyhow, more than any other man's; I could prove it by law if I gave the snap of a finger for what the law deals out, hit or miss. Was there a King with Gus Ingle's crowd? Or a Honeycutt? No, but there was a Brodie! And I'm his heir, by thunder. It's mine more'n any man's."

King laughed at him.

"Since when have you been studying law, Brodie? Since you got back this last trip, figuring you might have a word with the sheriff? I happened to see you and Andy Parker standing together on the cliffs. I saw Andy go overboard. What is more, I had a talk with him before I buried him."

Brodie's big mouth dropped open; his little blue eyes rounded, and he put one hand at his throat nervously.

"Andy's a liar; always a liar," he said thickly. But he seemed annoyed. Then his face cleared, and he, too, laughed, derision in his tone. "Any-way, he's dead and can't lie no more, and your word against mine ain't more'n an even break. So if your nosing sheriff gets gazy with me I'll twist his cursed neck for him."

"Suit yourself. I've told you already I came for a talk with Honeycutt and not with you."

"Then you'll wait until I'm done with him," roared Brodie, all of his first baffled rage sweeping back through his blood. "And now you'll clear out!"

King stooped forward just a little, gathering himself and ready as he saw Brodie crouch for a spring. It was just then that both remembered old Honeycutt. For the old man, tottering in the opening of the rear door, was muttering in a wicked sort of glee:

"Up with them hands of your'n, Swen Brodie. High up an' right quick, or I'll blow your ugly head off'n your shoulders!"

In his trembling hands was a double-barreled shotgun, sawed off and doubtless loaded to the muzzle with buck-shot. Though the thing wavered considerably, its end was not six feet from Brodie's head, and both nervous fingers were playing as with palsied about the triggers. King expected the discharge each second.

Brodie whirled and drew back, his face turning gray.

"Put it down, you old fool; put it down!" he cried raspingly. "I'll go. The old man cackled in his delight. "I'll put nothin' down," he announced triumphantly. "You set down that box."

Hastily Brodie put it on the table. "Git!" cried old Honeycutt.

They could hear the air rushing back into Brodie's lungs as he came to the door and his fear left him.

"I'll be back, Honeycutt, don't you fear," he growled savagely. "As for you, King, you and me ain't done. I'll get you where there's no old fool to butt in, and I'll break every bone in your body."

"I'll be ready, Brodie," said King. He watched the great hulking figure as it went out; two hundred and fifty pounds of brawn there, every ounce of it packed with power and the cunning of brutish battle. If he ever fought Swen Brodie, just man to man, with only the weapons nature gave them, what would the end be?

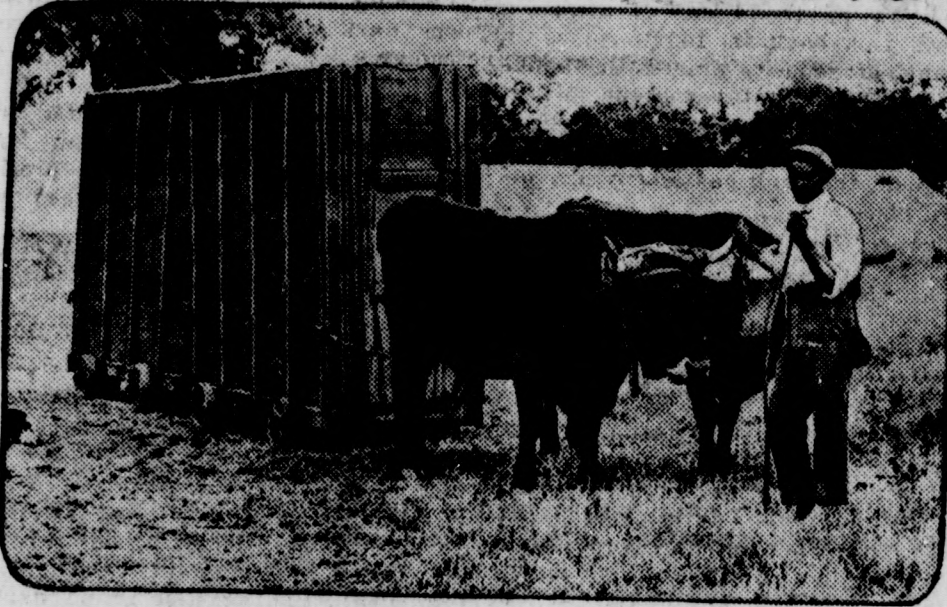

But Brodie was gone, his shadow withdrawn from the door-step, and he had his business with Honeycutt.

"Put your gun down, Honeycutt," he said quietly. "I want to talk with you."

"I got the big stiff on the run!" mumbled the old man. "He can't come an' bulldoze me. Not me, he can't. No, nor if Swen Brodie can't git the best of me, no other man can," he added meaningly, glaring at King.

The Charm of Madrid

Transporting a Bull to the Madrid Bullring.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

MADRID, Spain's political press box where it was recently announced that Catalonia was voted greater autonomy by the Spanish cortes, is one of the newest and most modern capitals of western Europe.

To the traveler who spends a few hours or a few years in the Spanish capital, the great avenue, Gran Avenida de la Libertad, is the city's outstanding feature. It is one of the finest boulevards in Europe.

The most imposing of the governmental palaces, museums, and hotels face this noble boulevard, which runs north to south along the eastern edge of the city. On its fringe lies an exclusive residential section and the large park known in the old days as Buen Retiro. Were the foreign visitor to linger in the capital no longer than 24 hours, he could still see much of its throbbing life on this one great avenue.

The Avenida's wide, tree-lined walks for pedestrians, lying between the inner automobile and carriage highway and the outer traffic roads, are vividly alive by day and literally thronged by early evening. Rows of chairs are packed on each side of the broad walks.

Summer Madrid makes itself comfortable. All along the walks are refreshment booths. Beer is popular but has not replaced the many typical soft drinks, in favor for centuries. As you sit sipping your cold, creamy, almond-flavored horchata, up comes the boy known as the barquillero. He carries a barrel-like metal receptacle containing the sweet, rolled wafers called barquillos. You hand out a coin, spin the wheel on top of the barrel, and watch for the figure which indicates the number of wafers you will win. No ban has yet been placed on this mild form of gambling.

Army officers in brilliant uniforms, men garbed in mourning black even in midsummer, pretty, graceful, dark-haired women, sturdy, barelegged children—these and countless other types pass. Lottery sellers with strident voices, wizened peanut vendors, coquettish flower sellers, cry their wares. "All the world," as the Spaniards express it, is out-of-doors.

Even with fashions away, the majority of those who crowd the promenades are modishly dressed. The young women have bobbed hair. Upper and middle-class women wear hats. The woman of the masses scorns a "bonnet" yet her skin is free from freckles.

Fluttering of Fans.

Fans, not parasols, are the vogue. The paseos are all a flutter. It is to be regretted that continental and oriental decorations on fans are now the style, for there is nothing prettier than the old-fashioned Valencian fan decorated with typical Spanish scenes and figures.

These fans can still be found, if you will search, along with painted tiles and china with Zuloaga designs from Segovia, decorated porcelain from the ancient factory at Talavera de la Reina, Damascene ware from Toledo, linen drawn-work from the Toledan village of Lagartera, and hand-made lace from the south of Spain. The little dolls wearing regional peasant costumes are made in Madrid.

The capital's summer temperature is high, but it is a dry heat, not moist and sticky. You broil in the sun, but turn the corner, to the shady side of the street, and there is a breath of cool air from the mountains. Madrid is elevated more than 2,000 feet above sea level.

There is an abundant water supply from the Guadarramas, and in summer the streets are hosed thoroughly from four to six times a day. Systematic tree planting and park development have made a refreshing city in the midst of a scorched plain, long ago stripped of its trees. The Castilian farmers of old believed the birds to be their mortal enemies and left no haven for the winged host.

Shops close every afternoon from one or two o'clock until four or five. The dinner hour is late from our standpoint, from 8:30 to 10:30. Madrilenos know how to enjoy the magic hours of early evening.

Open-air band concerts continue until two o'clock in the morning. If you stay up to put summer Madrid to bed, you will meet the huge, creaking, two-wheeled, hooded carts lumbering into town with country produce in round, straw-covered baskets, bound for the central market, where a hill of water-melons will soon be in evidence. Carts which come from beyond the mountains put up overnight in the old part of town, at inns for all the world like the fondouks of Morocco, save that jaded mules, drowsing in the courtyard, here take the place of camels.

On the surface, Madrid is modern, continental, as beautiful in spots as Paris; but there are still odd, hidden corners delightfully medieval. In this lies the great city's charm. Youngest, yet mightiest, of Iberian cities, the Spanish capital reminds one more of Buenos Aires than of any of its Latin sisters. Like the far-southern metropolis, it is not congested and is surrounded by a practically treeless agricultural region.

Facing Madrid's Gran Avenida is the gigantic building known as the palace of communications, which houses the postal and telegraph offices. This is one of the finest public buildings in the world. Among its unique features are the labeled locating maps on the outer wall just above the slots where you mail your letters. There are eight of these maps, showing different sections of Spain, with an additional letter box labeled "Army in Africa."

Outside the main post office, stamps are on sale at tobacco shops in all parts of the city. In each of these shops is a letterbox. You can also mail your letter in a box on the red and yellow tram car, if you will run after it, and be assured of quick service to the main office.

Near the post office are the national library, the archeological museum, and the museum of modern painting—all three of great interest to the student and art lover. Even more famous is the National Museum of Painting and Sculpture, better known as the Prado museum, where are hung those glorious Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth-century masterpieces collected by the art-loving Spanish kings.

The Botanical garden next door provides a breathing place for the poorer classes, a playground for those big-eyed, creamy-skinned children, whose beauty, vivacity, and good manners impress every traveler who visits Spain. Here even the poorest child is taught to practice the courtesies of life.

Madrid's eastern park (El Retiro) has magnificent trees and lakes and the famous "Rosaleda," or rose garden, with its three thousand and more varieties. If you keep on the driveways, you will meet, in the late afternoon, every manner of vehicle, from a smart limousine to a provincial mule-drawn carriage; but stray afoot onto the shady paths and you will find even more of interest.

In the construction of the splendid Gran Via, with its big hotels, smart shops, and department stores, more than four thousand dwellings, in a labyrinth of ancient streets in the heart of the city, were demolished. Above all other buildings in this new quarter towers the National Telephone company's steel skyscraper.

Open-Air Movies.

Moving pictures, screened in the open, attract crowds on summer nights, and by this method the telephone company is teaching the masses how to use the automatic telephone. And, speaking of the "movies," Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, and Charlie Chaplin are Madrid favorites.

The Puerta del Sol is Madrid's hub. This oblong square bears the name of a vanished gate in the one-time encircling town wall. It is the terminal station of many of the 50-odd municipal trolley lines.

In the center of the Puerta del Sol is one of the stations of the underground railway, familiarly known as the "Metro." By the surface entrance of each subway station hangs a map showing you where you are going or from where you came.

Madrid's subway carries passengers the length of the city, with shorter latitudinal lines. Riding north to Cuatro Caminos (Four Roads) at the end of the line, we find amazing building activity, big apartment houses springing up for the use of the growing middle class.

As a means of communication between towns throughout Spain, the motor omnibus has taken the place of the old-time diligence. Such buses traverse the capital, connecting it not only with near-by villages, but with far-distant cities. In recent years there has been notable improvement in national highways, especially on the main arteries from north to south.

High-wheeled carts drawn by mules or by mules and horses harnessed tandem, donkey carts and pannier-laden donkeys, their heads decorated with red woolen tassels, add a picturesque touch to the streets. The cumbersome ox cart of Old Madrid has been banished.

Change of Heart

"MADGE dear!" "Walter."

That was the way they began. After a separation of four months Madge had written to Walter and told him that she would be glad to have him call that Saturday afternoon, and she had anticipated the little interview under the grape arbor beside her father's country house with a tenseness that somehow seemed to leave her, now that she actually saw the slender young man approach her with outstretched hands.

"I wanted to tell you, Walter—dear," she said permitting him to take her hands gently in his as they sat down together on the bench under the arbor, "that I've changed my mind entirely—about what a girl ought to do. I didn't let you know because I wanted to be sure; and I wanted to surprise you, I—"

"But Madge, dear," said the young man, "you were perhaps entirely right. I've been thinking things over myself. I realize that conditions are not what they were when our mothers were young. My cousin has been spending the summer with us—Martha Stone—I know you'd like her and I have told her all about you. She believes as you do—that in these days a girl has the right to choose—whether she wants to devote herself to domestic matters or follow some career that she's really better suited for."

Madge looked up amazed but the young man continued. "The fact is, Madge—dear—that Martha somehow put the matter so I understood it. Martha has wonderful ideas—I know you and she will be great friends. She herself says 'that if she ever marries she will continue her music teachings.'"

Madge just sat and looked at Walter and felt the gentle pressure of his hand on hers without a bit of the thrill that she had expected. Six months ago when they saw each other for the last time they had come to a serious disagreement. They were making plans for an autumn wedding, and Madge had declared that she never intended to do any sort of housework. She had got her appointment as a high school teacher and she liked the work. Walter had protested—Walter who was ordinarily quite mild of manner had actually become quite angry. The engagement had not been actually broken, but Madge had gone off to visit an aunt and they had arranged between themselves not even to write for six months. They would think matters over in the meantime.

So Madge had gone to visit her aunt. Still wearing her engagement ring she met a nephew of her aunt's husband—Tom Bradford—and before many weeks had passed she had told Tom of her anxieties.

"I don't blame your Walter in the least," Tom had said. "I'd never want to marry a girl who wouldn't take an interest in her own home. If a girl didn't care enough for me to be willing to do that I wouldn't think she cared enough for me to marry me."

After that Madge registered in a school of domestic science and before another week had passed she was deeply interested in dietetics, cooking, household administration and was taking a course in dressmaking besides.

And here she was—Madge with Walter—waiting to tell him her great surprise—and Walter was in no mood to listen to her.

"So you see we really have my cousin Martha to thank," Walter was saying. "She showed me how absurd it would be for you—when you might be earning several thousand dollars a year even to start with—to be wasting your time on housework."

"She even suggested taking apartments—then we would both be quite free and we could get meals out and not bother keeping any maid. Martha has wonderful ideas—you certainly must meet her. Now you must tell me what you wanted to tell me about," said Walter.

Madge had slipped the ring from her finger that she had worn faithfully for six months of her absence. "I've been thinking things over, Walter. I really do think a great deal of you. But I was thinking that perhaps after all we oughtn't to be married. We might not have disagreed the way we did unless we were a little unsuited—"

Walter released the hand he had been holding—very gently, without apparently any emotion. "Well, of course," he said. "It is better to find that out now than later. My cousin Martha has such good ideas about marriage. She says she thinks most of the divorces nowadays are due to the fact that people don't really—"

Walter went on but Madge did not hear him. She was thinking of Tom that evening she left her aunt's. He had held her hand in a close grasp for a minute, then raising it impulsively to his lips he had kissed it and let it drop.

"Of course I want you to marry your Walter if he can make you happy," he said. "But he can't possibly love you more than I do."

"I think perhaps I could make Tom happier than I could you," Madge told Walter. "And of course there's your cousin Martha." He was wondering as he fingered the ring whether it would be too small for Martha.

Mountain Being Moved to Provide Power Plant Site

Down in Chile, American engineers are moving a mountain to make room for an electric power plant. Situated on the sea coast about ten miles south of Valparaiso, the peak covers a site considered ideal for a new steam generating station, so it is being blasted away. The plant will cost $16,000,000 and will be one of the largest on South America's west coast, with a capacity of 135,000 horsepower. It will serve Valparaiso and neighboring cities.

BANK OF AMERICA FOURTH IN DEPOSITS

Analysis of the recent statement of condition of the Bank of America shows this bank in fourth place in volume of deposits among the banks of the United States and the largest bank outside of New York City. Since the return to California management, the bank has advanced from fifth place.

The California bank is exceeded only by the Chase National with deposits of $1,302,456,350, the National City with $1,214,266,592 and the Guaranty Trust with $928,343,300. The Bank of America's combined deposits are $710,903,867.

The California institution is also one of the largest customers of Uncle Sam in the purchase of government securities. With a total of $156,270,420 invested in government securities, Bank of America ranks second among the five largest banks in the ratio of government bonds to deposits. The current statement shows that the holdings in government securities amount to approximately 22 per cent deposits. In the total amount of government securities held, Bank of America ranks fourth among the five major banks.

Similarly, state, county and municipal obligations totaling $75,000,000 amount to 11 per cent of deposits and all other bonds 3 1/2 per cent. Los Angeles a Cow Town! Dairy Figures Prove It

It isn't a slap at Los Angeles to call it a cow town. For, with 50,000 cows within its metropolitan area, it actually is the largest agricultural city in the world. In fact, it obtains much of its milk supply from its own back lots, according to C. V. Castle, assistant county farm advisor for the College of Agriculture, University of California. What's more, Castle reports production per cow in Los Angeles greater than in any other section of the United States.

Rockne Six Makes Hit With Police Officials

Further evidence of the trend among state and city police departments to replace their larger, more expensive patrol and scout cars with small, low-priced automobiles is contained in information received this week by W. J. Sweeney, local Rockne dealer.

"Although the Rockne has been on the market for only a few months," Mr. Sweeney said, "it is quickly establishing itself as an efficient and economical police car. Fort Wayne, Indiana, Lynn, Massachusetts, Plainfield, New Jersey, and other cities have already adopted the Rockne Six as the best possible car for police work."

"As one police official said: 'Our chief reason for using the smaller cars today is, of course, economy. Less original cost, and far less operation and upkeep cost. Second, we have found the small car of today has practically everything that we need, at least, that is found in the larger car. For example, the Rockne Six is easy to handle, fast on the getaway, and can travel at sustained high speeds. Further, it has exceptionally roomy front seats, and the durability of both body and engine that Studebaker has built into it makes it an economical and valuable piece of police equipment.'"

Lomita Park Seeking Lower Rate for Water

Complaint has been filed with the Railroad Commission by the Board of Fire Commissioners of the district of Lomita Park, San Mateo county, against California Water Service Company, in which allegations are made that the cost of water for fire fighting purposes in Lomita Park is excessive. The cost of water service to 20 fire hydrants is given as $1224 annually. Relative to this charge the complaint says:

"A review of the Water Service Company's annual operating reports shows a healthy growth during the past four years with net earnings of approximately eight per cent of the historical values. Complainant believes that the historical values are to a certain extent fictitious and that the actual property value is much below the present historical value, and therefore the permissible earning rate should be reduced."

New Bus Line Planned

C. R. Brooks of Redwood City has applied to the Railroad Commission for a certificate of public convenience and necessity to operate an auto passenger service between Redwood City, Atherton, Menlo Park and Palo Alto.

THIEVES ARE BUSY COLLECTING HOSE

Constable Silvio Landini, aided by deputies from the office of Sheriff James J. McGrath, has recently been combing the country for a gang of garden hose thieves. The investigators say that thousands of feet of hose have been stolen from places in the north end of the county during the past few months.

Constable Landini says the gang goes around during the day and "spots" the hose, then at night one man collects the hose from the outlets, rolls it up and places it along the highway. After making his rounds the first man gives a flashlight signal to a truck, waiting nearby, and the truck comes along and hastily gathers the hose, the constable explained.

He added that the cemeteries, where thousands of feet of hose are used, have not been molested because he believes the thieves are superstitious about robbing cemeteries. The constable said he had several important clues and hopes to land the hose thieves behind the bars.

Brisbane Woman and Child Reported Missing

An investigation is being made by Constable Silvio Landini of the possibility of foul play in connection with the disappearance of Mrs. Agnes McCarthy, who disappeared from her home in Brisbane about ten days ago. A five-year-old child, a daughter, Mary McCarthy, is also missing.

The woman was left in destitute circumstances by her husband, John McCarthy, a longshoreman, about two months ago, it has been learned, and since that time she has been supported by the Red Cross and other relief agencies, it is said.

According to Constable Landini, no clothing or household goods were taken away by Mrs. McCarthy when she disappeared from her home.

Popular Local Bachelor Joins Ranks of Benedicts

William McFarlane McGregor, of the Daly City Record staff, was married on Sunday last to Anna Oda Allan, of San Carlos. The matrimonial knot was tied by Rev. Dr. McArthur at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Keyworth, of Nineteenth street, San Francisco.

Mac sprung a surprise on his many friends in Daly City. They believed he contemplated his usual summer vacation trip to Canada and the high Sierras, but he has changed his solo holiday into a honeymoon jaunt with a charming lady who now responds to the name of Mrs. McGregor. The happy couple plan a trip to Vancouver and Salt Lake City, expecting to be back home in about three weeks.

W. M. McGregor has been a valued member of the Daly City Record staff for about a decade, and as such has become well known to the residents of Daly City.

His musical talents have made him a star turn at many a social and civic function, whether convulsing them with his Harry Lauder character sketches, attired in his native tartan, or entrancing them with the sweet melodies of Bonnie Scotland or dear old Ireland.

The Record, together with a host of friends, wish for Mr. and Mrs. McGregor a happy and prosperous voyage on the sometimes stormy seas of matrimony and a hope that "the moose will ne'er leave their grime" with a tear drop in its eye and that they'll aye be just as happy as we'd like them aye to be.
